Practice Summary

David A. Janes is Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of Janes Capital Partners, an Investment Banking Firm specializing in mergers, acquisitions and private equity investments in manufacturing companies.

Prior to forming Janes Capital Partners in 1997, Mr. Janes was the CEO of California Manufacturing Enterprises (CME), a company he founded in 1977. CME, through its seven subsidiaries, manufactured a wide variety of industrial products such as, proprietary high temperature insulation components for gas turbine engines which are used in flight, naval and stationary power generation applications, safety restraints for civilian and military aircraft, aluminum structural components for airframes, aircraft galley equipment, and other aviation related products.

During the late 1990s, Mr. Janes divested his principal interest in all but two of his manufacturing companies. The remaining companies, Intri-Plex Technologies U.S. and Intri-Plex Technologies Thailand manufacture critical mechanical components for computer disk drives and heat dissipating substrates for computer chips; he is both a principal investor and director.

Background

After leaving active Military duty in 1962, he began civilian employment as a Loan Officer trainee with the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank of St. Paul, Minnesota where he was promoted to Branch Manager of a Production Credit Association. In 1967, Mr. Janes left his position to pursue full-time education in Business Administration. He then joined United Bank of California (UCB), Los Angeles, as an officer in the Special Credits Division where he served initially as a credit analyst and loan work out officer. Prior to relocating to California in 1969, Mr. Janes also served as a city councilman and mayor pro-tempore for the city of Beaver Dam, Wisconsin. He also helped establish, and served as Vice President of, the Jaycees in his City.
